Riding on the storm wind, floating in the sunbeams, rising from the green leaves and the sparkling grass, the sunbeams, everything that lives, or grows, or is, permeating the atmosphere, there is a strange, mighty, mysterious, subtle principle which is the cause of all things. Men are only just beginning to understand a very little. They, as it were, have only reached the outer gates of the great temple. They call it electricity. Not only do the lightning bolts, the strongest structures, the most solid things man can rear, but it melts the most refractory stone. No heat the power of man can produce will melt a stone in an hour, it takes centuries, powders but the lightning bolts melt a stone in a moment.
